The Georgia Constitution

The Georgia Constitution is the supreme law of the state of Georgia. It was adopted in 1983 and has been amended several times since then.

The Constitution consists of 13 Articles and 12 Amendments. It establishes the framework for the state government, including the executive, legislative, and judicial branches.

The Constitution also includes a Bill of Rights that guarantees certain fundamental rights and freedoms to all Georgians.

Robert Howard's Role

Robert Howard was a prominent figure in the development of the Georgia Constitution. He served as a member of the Georgia Constitutional Commission, which was tasked with drafting the new constitution.

Howard was a strong advocate for a constitution that would protect the rights of individuals and limit the power of the government.

He also played a key role in the drafting of the Bill of Rights.

The Current Georgia Government

The current Georgia government is based on the framework established by the 1983 Constitution.

The executive branch is headed by the Governor, who is elected to a four-year term.

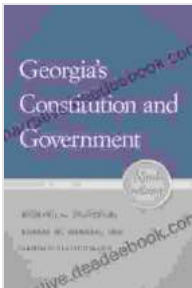

The legislative branch is the Georgia General Assembly, which consists of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The judicial branch is headed by the Georgia Supreme Court.

The Georgia Constitution and government have been shaped by the efforts of many individuals, including Robert Howard.

The Constitution is a living document that continues to evolve to meet the changing needs of the state.

The government of Georgia is responsible for providing essential services to its citizens and protecting their rights.
