The Founding Of The Namibian

The Namibian was founded in 1985 by a group of Namibian journalists who were committed to providing a voice for the voiceless. The newspaper's first editor was Gwen Lister, a white South African journalist who had been working in Namibia for several years. Lister was a strong advocate for Namibian independence, and she used the Namibian to promote the cause of freedom.

The Namibian quickly became a popular newspaper among Namibians. The newspaper's reporters provided in-depth coverage of the Namibian struggle, and they were not afraid to criticize the apartheid regime. The Namibian also published articles by Namibian writers and poets, which helped to raise awareness of Namibian culture and identity.
